Speaks at Delaware Photographic Society

November 26, 2018 - 7:30 pm

Cokesbury Village
Auditorium C
726 Loveville Road
Hockessin, DE 19707

FREE & OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

Join us on Monday, November 26 at 7:30 pm in Cokesbury's Auditorium C, to hear Sara Ascalon present her program "Creativity: A Conversation with Yourself." During Sara's program you will learn how to tap into the creative energy within you and experience the joy of letting go and sharing your vision with others.

"What is it like being inside that head of yours?" Sara has always had a slightly off-beat way of looking at the world and has been asked that question many times over. But how do you respond to something like that? After decades of searching, she found her answer in photography.

Sara is a former creative marketer and New Yorker who became a statistic in the economic downturn of 2008. With the loss of her career came a loss of purpose and identity and a relocation to South Jersey. She picked up photography as a pastime and found that it quickly became an obsession. Photography became her redemption during the rebuilding of her life. It gave her a creative outlet and opened up new social and professional opportunities. A few short years later, she is now a photography and post-processing educator, frequent exhibitor, the recipient of numerous local, national and international awards and President of the South Jersey Camera Club.
